FOREWORD

PHOTOGRAPHY from the air has opened up an entirely new era in pictorial representation. Scenes with which we are familiar when photographed, from the standpoint of the "man in the street" take on quite a new aspect when viewed from above. Directly overhead photographs are for the most part merely freak pictures, and the subjects all but unrecognisable. But the pictures the "Daily Post" has had taken aim at an artistic combination which, while preserving recognition by being taken at an angle, also contain the novel element of photography from the air. It is this happy combination which, at the hands of a most expert air photographer, and daring pilot, has resulted in the excellent views of our district which are here collected for reproduction. The views selected in the following pages are sufficiently varied to provoke a wide interest, both at home and abroad.
